Spin the black circle 2

The producers of Black-ish are back. Earlier this week, it was confirmed that Mixed-ish had been officially picked up by ABC. But what is the show about, and what can we expect? Mykal-Michelle Harris, Ethan William Childress, Arica Himmel, & Christina Anthony | Richard Cartwright/ABC via Getty Images Mixed-ish is a black-ish spin-off mixed-ish is actually the second spin-off of the Black-ish franchise. The first spin-off, Grown-ish, follows Zoey (Yara Shahidi), the oldest and arguably the most privileged of the Johnson children. The series captures her exams and afflictions as she tries to find her way around college life. Topics dealing with dating, drinking, friendship and the danger of yawning are all explored in the successful Freeform show. It's a wonderful show that blurs the line between adolescence and growing up. Mixed-ish is a prequel While the timeline of Grown-ish runs simultaneously with that of Black-ish, Mixed-ish serves as a prequel to Black-ish. The show follows young Bo (short for Rainbow and portrayed by Tracee Ellis Ross on Black-ish) in the mid-1980s, when she is forced to leave the area where she grew up and was taught at home to integrate into a traditional school system. Bo and her siblings experience a lot of culture shock and try to find their way around a whole new world. She and her Sibs are forced to confront their biracial identity for the first time and are struggling to adapt to their new lives. Children at school tirelessly question their race and decided to tease them and their family for it. Even if the series delves into more serious themes, it is also packed with a lot of humour and the feel-good music we expect from the black-ish universe. But who has the task of playing the young Bo? Let's take a look at the stars of the new series. Meet the cast of Starring as Bo is Arica Himmel, a young actress who is relatively new to the screen. Still, Sky has a strong theatrical background, and she seems more than able to rise to the challenge of playing such a popular character. A casting election that has sparked a lot of controversy, Tika Sumpter, was cast as Bo's mother, Angie. Although people acknowledge that Sumpter has an enormous talent, the woman who plays Angie in Black-ish is a very different complexion than Tika. Fans on Twitter even went so far as to call the casting an inverted Aunt Viv, referring to the exchange of actresses in the series The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air. The cast is rounded off by Ethan William Childress and Mykal-Michelle Harris, who act as Bo siblings. Finally, the author and comic book writer Christina Anthony will be played as Aunt Dee Dee. Since a Dynamic cast is already present, we can't wait to see them bring the mixed-ish universe to life. Somewhere above the rainbow The best thing about the series as a prequel is that we already know that Bo will eventually be good. This makes some of the crashing moments of rejection and pain a little more bearable. More bearable. The show sheds light on the biracial/multiracial experience and allows more children and families to finally see themselves on the screen in a tangible and authentic way. In an often strictly black and white world, get ready to get a little mixed-ish Tuesdays this fall on ABC. Based on the geometric definition of a polygon, a circle has no sides or infinite pages. By definition, a circle cannot have sides because it does not consist of line segments connected by common endpoints that form inner angles. By definition, a circle is an array of points positioned at the same distance from a central point. A polygon is a closed shape that consists of lines that all exist on the same plane and meet at vertices or points. The second theory implies that a circle is an apeirogon, which is a special polygon type that has an infinite number of sides that are formed where adjacent points meet. For some people, dark circles are commonplace under the eye. Many factors can cause these sub-eye circles to occur, including genetics and lifestyle choices. Fortunately, this frustrating condition is usually not a major health problem, although it can sometimes be a symptom of a larger problem. First and foremost, dark undereye circles are a cosmetic topic that means stress or age. Concealer can help cover up unsightly circles, but it doesn't really remove them. Fortunately, these dark circles can be treated with effective home remedies that tighten the skin and improve blood circulation. Sleep is one of the most common sources of dark under-eye circles. If you get up late and wake up early, it may be time to adjust your schedule. Stress can also contribute to under-eye circles, so consider reducing the number of commitments in your schedule. Try to keep the same sleep plan every day, getting 7-8 hours of sleep per night. Turn off your electronic devices an hour before bed and try meditation or yoga to relax. After these steps, eye pull should reduce, increase relaxation and promote healthy nocturnal habits that lead to less dark circles. Dark circles under your eyes can also be a sign that you don't keep enough water all day long. If you are dehydrated, your skin becomes dry and loses elasticity. To test the hydration values, press two fingers on the back of the arm and release. If the skin slowly fades back to its normal color instead of returning immediately, you are probably dehydrated. Try to drink at least eight servings of water per day, if you don't feel thirsty. This should keep your skin healthy and reduce the visibility of dark circles under your eyes. A popular home remedy for under-eye circles are chilled spoons. While it may seem silly, this could alleviate your symptoms. Take a pair of metal spoons and put them in the fridge for half an hour. When they are cooled, remove and gently place them over your eyes. The cool temperature helps, helps to inflammation, and the curved shape of the spoon reduces the amount of pressure on the area. If you don't have metal spoons at hand, an ice pack or bag of frozen vegetables can provide the same cooling effect. Remember to use a foil or cloth around the compress to prevent frostbite. A common reason for dark circles under the eyes is nasal congestion. For this reason, your under-eye area looks darker and duller if you are sick. To reduce circles caused by nasal congestion, it is important to treat the congestion rather than just the symptom. Nasal sprays are a quick and effective way to reduce these congestions because they help eliminate nasal blockages. However, you should always follow the instructions of the package carefully; Nasal sprays can be addictive if used for too long. Vitamin B-12 deficiency is another common culprit for dark under-eye circles, so it makes sense that taking a B-12 supplement would be a popular home remedy. B-12 is one of the most effective vitamins you can take as it improves energy and metabolism, among other things. It also increases the oxygen supply in the blood, which can help to reduce tired circles under the eyes. Blood has a tendency to show under the eyes where the skin is very thin. B-12 helps to create healthy red blood cells, brightening these dark spots. B-12 is also found in animal proteins, so adding lean meat to your diet can be very beneficial. Smoking is one of the worst things you can do for your skin, so participating in a recruitment program is an excellent remedy for under-eyes circles. Smoking causes cells in the body to break, which can lead to a variety of cosmetic problems: wrinkles and fine lines, spots and visible dark circles under the eyes. If you are currently smoking, you will exacerbate your problems under your eyes. Popular hiring techniques include counseling, nicotine patches and gums, and medications. Smoking can also damage your health in a much more serious way, so it is best to stop completely. If you plan to be outdoors, make sure they foam anywhere on sunscreen. This includes your face and the sensitive areas around your eyes. Always use an SPF of 30 or higher, even if a tan may seem tempting. Sun exposure causes long-term skin damage, and areas where the skin is thin, such as under the eyes, are at even higher risk. You should use a moisturizer that contains sunscreen daily to protect yourself from harmful rays that occur even in cloudy light. This helps to protect your skin and reduces the visibility of dark circles and other spots. Cooled are refreshing and relaxing and can help to reduce dark circles. Leave a cucumber to cool in the fridge for at least half an hour, then cut two slices. Find a convenient place to lie down and place the discs over your eyes. After 20 minutes, remove all residue from the face and wash. The cucumbers contain vitamin K and also have anti-inflammatory properties, making them an excellent remedy for dark dark or exhaustion. Cooling the cucumber also allows it to act as a cold compress and apply gentle pressure to the eye area to reduce swelling. The application of moisturizer on a daily basis can also help to eliminate under-eye discoloration. Her face is exposed to elements all day, including sun, wind and smog. Every night you should gently cleanse your face to get rid of build-up, then apply a moisturizer to repair damaged skin. In the morning, apply a light moisturizer again to replenish the hydration lost overnight. There are many facial moisturizers in the shops, but Aloe Vera is an excellent natural moisturizer. Using one of these creams or gels on your face daily can improve the health of your skin and help to fade any unsightly dark circles. One of the best things someone with dark circles can do is leave them alone. Many people tend to touch the area under their eyes all day long. When they are stressed or tired, people often rub their eyes. Even someone who cares about their under-eye circles can apply sunscreen or moisturizer too vigorously and cause further damage. The area under the eye is slightly bruised, so avoid rubbing or pressing vigorously. The last thing you want to do is make the area worse by making it bleed and extending the life of your undereye circles. Circles.
